I Imagine This: Scenario 1

You've set out on that first big camping adventure. You're eager to spend some time relaxing in the great outdoors. As soon as you set up camp, you hear children screaming in glee from the waterslide behind your site. More kids swoop by on bicycles.

I Imagine This: Scenario 2

You've promised your family a super fun camping trip. However, the kids are bored. There's no pool, no playground, and nothing fun to do. Plus, you've realized you're out of water and out of room in your holding tanks, with two more nights to go and no hookups at the campsite.

I The Problem with These Scenarios

There's nothing wrong with the campground in either scenario. There's nothing wrong with the campers' vision and plans in either scenario. The problem is that there's a disconnect between the campers and the park.

I The Truth About Campgrounds

There's no perfect campground. There's only the right match between the camper and campground.
