

Your Guide to RV Organization

Welcome to Togo University's course on how to organize your RV. Whether you're a new or experienced RVer, this course will help you tidy up your space, build good habits, and develop a system for staying organized—making life on the road much more enjoyable.

RVs vary in size, shape, and floor plans, which can make a one-size-fits-all approach challenging to implement. In this course, a professional organizer walks you through how to analyze a space and create a system that will make your life easier and help you save time, giving you more time to do the things you love.

Living and traveling in a small space means that things can easily get messy. Take some time to envision what it looks and feels like to have a well-organized RV. Use this as your motivation to take the steps outlined in this course to achieve a space that allows you to live comfortably and travel with ease.

Each chapter features videos, text, and quizzes to test your knowledge. Take as much time as you need to watch the videos, take notes, and create a system that works for you in the long run.

Getting organized in a small space can take time, but we promise that it's worth it. Spending time in the great outdoors will be even more enjoyable knowing that you have an organized home to come back to.

Your Guide to RV Organization

I What does it mean to be organized?

In an organized RV, all your items have a designated space to return to after you are done using them.

The key to getting organized is to first understand your space and how you want it to work for you. Some people can easily create a system before adding anything in. Others may need to use their space a bit before implementing an organization system.

If you have a brand new RV and want to create a system before using it, you can skip to Step 2. If you've already been using your RV for some time, proceed by taking inventory of your space below.

I Taking inventory of your space

The first thing to do when establishing an organized space is to walk through your RV and take a full inventory of its contents. This means opening cabinets, drawers, closets, the fridge, and any other areas in your RV that store items.

Make note of any area that needs to be organized. Any time you feel like a space is messy, things are falling out, or items do not have a proper home, write them down as areas that need to have a system created for them.

Your Guide to RV Organization

As you walk through your RV and take inventory of your space, it's also important to note "drop spots." These are areas where you tend to place keys, papers, mail, and other items. Where do you keep miscellaneous items?

Problem Areas:

General living space:

Kitchen:

Your Guide to RV Organization

Bedroom:

Bathroom:

Exterior storage:

Your Guide to RV Organization

| My Drop Spots:

Once you've identified the areas you want to organize, talk to those sharing the space with you and make sure that they're on board with the plan. Involve them from the start and allow them to have input on common areas, then give them freedom to create their own system in their designated spaces.

Example of how two different systems can co-exist

Getting organized is a process. Don't expect to organize your RV in one day. Take your time and enjoy the process of creating a system that will work for you in the long run.